PEACE AND AFTER

After seventeen months of tensely and anxiety, of high hopes and black moments, of successes and temporary defeats, comes the news that the armistice between Germany and the Allies has been signed.

Outwardly the temperament of the people of the United States had not changed much. They were accused at times of extravagance beyond the warrant of war-time necessities, profiteers flourished, political quarrels and investigations slowed the progress of the war. But the real feeling was shown in the peace celebration yesterday. Although all along the majority have been cheerful and uncomplaining and placid, the wild burst of enthusiasm that greeted the peace news showed what a strain there had been under the calm attitude.

But now is not a time for complete relaxation. Though victory is ours, there are great tasks ahead for us before the world can swing back again into its normal course. Problems of reconstruction are important and grave. The soldiers who must remain in France for a year or two years until they can be transported home need our attention as much, if not more now than they did during the war.

Careful attention and thought must be given to financial matters so that the much-predicted financial depression or panic will not follow. Industries will have to change back again from the production of war-time essentials to those of peace times. Beside our own problems, we are asked and feel obligated to aid in the reconstruction of our Allied countries that have been devastated and seared by the four years of war that has been waged within their territory.

After the first feeling of joy and exultation at the coming of peace, we grow calmer and we see the value of work that is necessary to return to normal conditions. But victory is ours and buoyed up by this fact we can easily dispose of these lesser problems since the black shadow of Prussianism and autocracy has been removed.

DON'T DESERT

The war is over but the time has not yet come when the people of the United States can lay down their arms and their fighting spirit and rest on their laurels.

Many of our fighting men must remain in France for a year or even two years. Shall we desert them? The United War Activities are conducting a campaign for funds to care for the welfare of our Army until it is brought back and demobilized.

The soldiers cannot desert; therefore we must stick by them.

The spirit that nothing matters now because the war is won is a bad one.

It shows the mind of the deserter and the selfish ungrateful person who takes everything he wants and then leaves his benefactor without means to care for himself.

The United War Activities campaign was vital before the armistice; it is just as vital now. Although peace has come, our soldiers still need their ministrations. Give to the fund as the thank offering of a grateful people.

A MORNING RESOLUTION

I will this day try to live a simple, sincere and serene life; repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity and self-seeking; cultivating cheerfulness, magnanimity, charity and the habit of holy silence; exercising economy in expenditure, carefulness in conversation, diligence in appointed service, fidelity to every trust, and a childlike trust in God.—BISHOP VINCENT.

A BALANCED DIET FOR CHILDREN IS IMPORTANT

At the present time, when so many lives are blotted out on the battlefields of France, it is important that the lives of the coming generation be guarded carefully so that strong men and women may build up what has been torn down during the four years of war. One of the most important means of preserving the lives of children is careful and judicious feeding. The extension department of the University of Missouri gives some good advice on the feeding of children in Bulletin, volume 18, number 8, Extension Series 23, which is written by Miss Hildegrade Kneeland, instructor in home economics.

According to Miss Kneeland, milk should form the chief article of diet for children. A quart a day is the amount she thinks sufficient. This milk may be served as a drink for very young children or for children over two years of age it may be combined with other foods, such as well cooked cereals, simple ice creams, custards, cereal puddings or milk sherbets.

Besides milk, various other things are needed to balance the diet. Bread, eggs, fruit and green vegetables should be given to children. These foods should, of course, be cooked so that they may be easily digested. Only a small amount of sugar should be used. Children should not be allowed to eat between meals, since this habit tends to overload the stomach and prevent the digestive organs from performing their work properly.

It is also necessary that plenty of water be given to children, especially children under two years of age. Water is not ordinarily thought of as a food, however, Miss Kneeland says that it is a very important food since it forms a great part of the tissues, blood and digestive organs.

A carefully planned diet for children from two to twelve years of age is outlined in the bulletin by Miss Kneeland. This bulletin may be obtained from O. W. Weaver, Agricultural Editor.

CAN YOU MAKE GOOD BUTTER?

Some Are Satisfied With Plain Grease for the Table.

Making good butter always does not tell a woman that she does not know how to make good butter is hazardous, yet it is true that a great many women do not, ventures W. B. Combs of the University of Missouri College of Agriculture. It is true that they churn their butter from cream, but in many cases the resulting product is far from desirable. They are satisfied with plain grease for the table. These same women protest when the market will not take their product at near the price of good butter. If they would take pains with their butter-making they would find a demand for their butter at full market price.

Here are only a few suggestions such women probably overlook:

Use only slightly sour cream with a clean acid flavor, free from dirt and lumps of curd.

Pay strict attention to the temperature at which churning is done and use a temperature which will result in butter granules about the size of pop corn. If cream is too old the granules will be small and hard, if too warm, they will probably be large and soft. Take temperature with a thermometer.

Drain buttermilk well off of butter before washing, then pour in a dipper of water to rinse off the last of the buttermilk. Following this add water for washing and give only enough washing to rid butter of buttermilk—six or eight revolutions, if a barrel churn.

Work salt into butter at the rate of three-fourths of an ounce to the pound. Work until water is expelled and butter appears waxy.

Put the butter up in pound prints, wrapped in parchment paper and place in a butter carton on which is the buttermaker's name.

Be clean and neat with every operation and insist that "Pa" bring in clean milk.

NATIONAL KITCHEN IN ENGLAND

Women Have Food Cooked There Then Call for It.

LONDON, Sept. 25 (By Mail).—As a fuel economizing measure, the food ministry has requested English households to forego the luxury of individual cooking fires this winter and patronize the national kitchen wherever available.

More than 600 of these hot meal clearing houses already have been established throughout the kingdom, and a large extension of the system is planned. The community kitchens have been eminently successful. More than 1,000,000 portions are being dispensed by them daily.

Housewives take their food, have it cooked, and call for it in time for dinner. A small fee is charged for the cooking.
